Sometimes, money does fall from the sky. You just have to know where it is going to land.

This week, Ohlone will give away more than $1,800 in scholarships. As with most, colleges, Ohlone has an abundance of scholarships waiting to be claimed.

There is a total of $20,000, donated by various patrons and companies, to be given away by this May. Scholarships will be granted for the coming fall semester, as well as to transferring students. Johari Peebles of the Ohlone Foundation said Ohlone is "...eager to put money into students' hands."

Scholarships will be awarded in the areas of international student aid, health sciences, broadcasting, bio-technology, music and general education. What scholarship money is not given away this semester will be given away in the fall.

Writing contest deadline May 6

By FRANKIE ADDIEGO
Staff writer

Ohlone College will be holding its annual writing contest. The prize will be $200 and will be awarded in May. The winning story, or part of the story, will be published in the final issue of the Monitor for this semester. Fiction and non-fiction entries will be accepted.

The judge and coordinator of the contest is Jeffrey Dean, Assistant Professor of English. Dean will oversee the judging of the entries, as he has done in many of the previous years. "I try to stay true to what I think Karen Rosenbaum [envisioned]," said Dean.

As for what Dean is looking for in an entry, he says, "it really varies, in general, we just look for really strong writing, [and/or] a compelling story...we've had fiction and non fiction stories." All interested writers must be enrolled in at-least three units during the 2004-2005 academic year. Also, they may not submit any stories that have been previously published.

Writers are also limited to two stories. They can both be fiction or non-fiction, or they can be one of each. Entries should be no longer than 2,000 words. All entries should also have a cover page containing the story's title, the author's name, and phone number and mailing address. An e-mail address is optional. Electronic submissions can be submitted and entries must be typed and double-spaced. Pages must be stapled or numbered.

Submissions will be accepted from on April 18 until May 6. Entries may be mailed to Dean, or simply placed in his mailbox.
