The last bond passed at about 56 percent and Newark voters overwhelmingly voted for it and pushed it to victory.

It is expected that college staff, faculty and students will phone banks, speak to community groups about the need for the bond, and pass out fliers to obtain votes, just as they did to pass the prior bond in 2002.

Last year, Ohlone employed the opinion research firm Fairbank, Maslin, Maullin & Associates and it found that 74 percent of the respondents polled believed state budget cuts harmed Ohlone.

In accordance with state law, bond funds can be utilized only for infrastructure improvements and cannot be spent on salaries and supplies.

A bond oversight committee oversees all expenditures of bond money. Ohlone has an excellent track record regarding bond oversight and audits, which is a factor, regarding passing a new bond.

Former teacher dies

Longtime teacher of German and French, Professor Milos Collins, passed away on Feb. 7, at the age of 92.

Collins was a member of the faculty for more than 24 years, from 1969 until 1993.

Born in 1918 in the Czech Republic, she met and married her husband Lawrence Collins in Belgium. They remained married until his passing in 1982.

Collins graciously earmarked the Ohlone College Foundation as the recipient of any and all donations made in her honor.

Professor Collins will be missed by not only the Ohlone College

-ing to find out. But only through looking at incident reports.

So is the government specifically pointing out issues with its competition or will it be fair and recognize that its own GM products also have the exact same yet widely uncovered issues?

To me, it seems that Toyota has a wide range of vehicles tailored for everyone; the Prius for the eco-friendly; the Scions for the underground cool; all the way to the Lexus for the uber-elite. Although right now the media seems to be attacking the entire fleet, I believe that Toyota will be able to rebuild its status just by being the way it always has.

Whether it's a conspiracy or not? You decide. In the meantime I'll keep driving what I feel is my reliable and safe Toyota.

community, but by her many loving friends throughout the Bay Area.

A memorial mass is scheduled to take place at a later date.

BS IN BUSINESS 2011

"When I started school I thought I wanted to be an artist. But I've realized talent alone isn't enough. It helps to understand how the business world works to make it in the arts today. I haven't given up on my dream, I've just gotten smarter about chasing it."
